5 THINGS TO KNOW

WELCOME TO METRO BOSTON

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT, REPORTER

Leaving your pets can be hard, especially in an emergency evacuation, when you know you have to evacuate for your own safety. In fact, people are less likely to evacuate and keep themselves safe if they can't bring their pets with them. Like any other emergency, the Merrimack Valley gas explosions posed a threat for pets and pet owners, but the MSPCA stepped in right away to do what they could. Read more about how they responded to the disaster inside or at metroboston.us.

1 TRUMP EXPECTED TO TOUT N. KOREA PROGRESS AT UN

A year after Donald Trump threatened to "totally destroy" North Korea in his first speech at the United Nations, the U.S. president will return to the podium in New York this week to tout diplomatic efforts that have reduced the risk of war. But even if Trump's rhetoric at the annual United Nations General Assembly is expected to differ sharply from his 2017 address in which he mocked North Korean leader Kim Jong Un as "Rocket Man" on a "suicide mission," some U.S. officials and analysts say Pyongyang has yet to take concrete measures to show it is prepared to give up a nuclear arsenal that threatens the United States. The change of mood was sealed when Trump and Kim met for an unprecedented summit on June 12 in Singapore, and in the past week, the North Korean leader promised South Korean President Moon Jae-in dismantlement of a missile site and nuclear complex — if the United States takes "corresponding action." While appearing to set a positive tone, the commitments fell far short of Washington's demands for a complete inventory of North Korea's weapons programs and irreversible steps toward denuclearization.

2 3-D GUN PUBLISHER JAILED ON SEX ASSAULT CHARGE

A Texas man running a 3-D printed guns company was booked into a Houston jail on a charge of sexual assault on Sunday after Taiwanese officials sent him back to the United States, where he is accused of having sex with an underage girl. Cody Wilson, 30, flew to Taiwan after learning he was under investigation, police said, and was picked up by Taiwanese authorities on Friday after his U.S. passport was annulled. He was deported to the United States on Saturday. He was booked into Harris County jail in Houston on Sunday, according to the jail's website. As the founder of Defense Distributed, Wilson became a notable figure in the U.S. debate over guns after the company posted on the internet the blueprints for plastic guns that can be made with a 3-D printer. The files could previously be downloaded for free, but a federal judge issued a nationwide injunction last month that blocked the posting of the blueprints online. Wilson was placed under investigation after a counselor on Aug. 22 told authorities a 16-year-old girl said she was paid $500 to have sex with Wilson at an Austin hotel, police said.

4 FLO'S DANGER REMAINS AS FLOODWATERS RECEDE

Nearly all rivers and waterways in North and South Carolina will crest Sunday, but most will remain at dangerous flood levels for days to come, the U.S. National Weather Service warned, more than a week after the arrival of Hurricane Florence, which has killed at least 40 people. Swaths of rivers near the Atlantic coast will not crest for days to come, such as the lower Cape Fear River near Wilmington, N.C., one of the hardest-hit communities, said Bob Oravec, a meteorologist with the NWS' Weather Prediction Center in College Park, Md. "This isn't over," Oravec said early Sunday. "Large sections of rivers near the coast won't start cresting until at least early in the week, maybe later ... All that water is going to take a good while to recede," he said. "Damage can still be done. It'll be a slow drop." Meanwhile, remnants of the once mighty storm brought heavy rains northwest up the Ohio Valley, prompting flood watches and warnings from Texas to Virginia and Maryland, at least through Monday, the weather service said.

5 CAPSIZED TANZANIA FERRY MANAGERS DETAINED

Tanzanian authorities said on Sunday the number of people who died in a ferry that capsized in Lake Victoria had risen to 224 and the vessel's managers had been detained for questioning. The ferry, MV Nyerere, sank on Thursday evening just a few meters from the dock on Ukerewe, the lake's biggest island. The definitive cause of the capsizing is not yet known but officials have said preliminary investigation shows the ferry was carrying more people than legally permitted. Boat accidents on Lake Victoria, which is shared by the East African countries of Uganda, Tanzania and Kenya, are common and often caused by lax safety laws, weak enforcement and old and poorly maintained vessels. Prime Minister Kassim Majaliwa told TBC that officials involved in managing the ferry had been detained. "The government will form a special investigation commission of experts which will investigate the source of the accident and legal measures will be taken against all who were involved in causing the tragedy," he said. A search-and-rescue team has been attempting to flip the ship, which is belly-up in the waters.

Kavanaugh accuser to testify Thursday in Senate: Lawyers

There are still questions as to who will question Christine Blasey Ford.

Activists demonstrate on Capitol Hill against Supreme Court nominee Brett Kavanaugh. GETTY IMAGES

California professor Christine Blasey Ford has agreed to testify before a Senate panel on Thursday morning about her sexual assault allegations against Supreme Court nominee Brett Kavanaugh, her lawyers said on Sunday.

The lawyers said they made "important progress" in a morning call with Senate Judiciary Committee staff members and agreed to the hearing even though the committee refused to subpoena Mark Judge, who Ford said witnessed the attack at a high school party, as well as others who she said were present.

"Despite actual threats to her safety and her life, Dr. Ford believes it is important for Senators to hear directly from her about the sexual assault committed against her," said the statement from attorneys Debra Katz, Lisa Banks and Michael Bromwich.

"She has agreed to move forward with a hearing even though the Committee has refused to subpoena Mark Judge," it said. "They have also refused to invite other witnesses who are essential for a fair hearing that arrives at the truth about the sexual assault."

U.S. Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Chuck Grassley had set a Saturday afternoon deadline for Ford to decide whether and how she will testify. Ford said Kavanaugh sexually assaulted her at a high school party 36 years ago, pinning her down and trying to take off her clothes, when she was 15 and he was 17.

Kavanaugh, a conservative federal appeals court judge, has denied the allegations and said he would be willing to testify.

Her lawyers tentatively agreed to a hearing on Saturday and announced a definite answer after additional conversations on Sunday.

There are unresolved procedural and logistical issues, they said, including whether the committee's Republican senators, who are all male, or staff attorneys would question her.

Republicans will be forced to walk a careful line in questioning Ford's account without alienating female voters ahead of the November congressional elections.

President Donald Trump has defended his Supreme Court nominee and questioned why Ford did not report the incident to police. REUTERS

MSPCA stepping up for pets displaced by gas explosions

Following the gas explosions in Lawrence, North Andover and Andover, the MSPCA has taken in almost 100 pets.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

When a Columbia Gas pipeline ruptured on Sept. 13, triggering dozens of gas explosions and fires that rocked the Merrimack Valley, thousands of homes and businesses lost power. For one Lawrence family, that meant their German shepherd, Kolya, was alone for more than 24 hours in a dark house.

Laura Mancini, who lives in Los Angeles but has family in Lawrence, explained that her sister was eventually able to retrieve Kolya (their parents' pet), but that the dog began to suffer from severe anxiety, pacing back and forth and barking.

Mancini's sister has a young child, and with her parents unable to go back into their house right away, the family couldn't care for Kolya in the way the dog needed. Mancini helped them reach out to the MSPCA.

"They made room for Kolya at the Boston MSPCA until my parents returned to their home and kindly bussed him back to Methuen where my parents were able to retrieve him just hours after contacting them," Mancini said in an email. "The MSPCA gave my family peace of mind during a time of uncertainty, as their city was crumbling around them."

Many residents were unable to return to their homes right after the gas explosions and needed to find shelter for their pets. The MSPCA took in 92 pets following the Merrimack Valley gas explosions, said Mike Kelley, MSPCA director of adoption centers and programs.

The organization luckily learned of the disaster early on, when an Animal Control Officer from Lawrence called their Methuen director.

Residents dropped off 600 packages of dog and cat food, more than 50 boxes of cat litter, and donated more than $24,000.

"We anticipated just from the Lawrence part of it alone that there would be animals in need, and we immediately started a plan to [notify] the police department and the fire department that we were available," he said. "We wanted to be out in front of it. We didn't want to wait to be asked for help."

From experience, the MSPCA knows it's sorely needed in emergencies, and that it's presence helps keep people safe, not just their pets.

In addition to contacting officials, the MSPCA spread the word on social media that they were a resource, and quickly pets began to pour in. Staff set up nearly 100 reserve cages in the training room of Nevins Farm for the affected cats and dogs, draping the cages in sheets to calm the animals' nerves.

Donations poured in, as well. Residents dropped off 600 packages of dog and cat food, more than 50 boxes of cat litter and donated more than $24,000 to the MSPCA Nevins Farm adoption center fund.

"The Merrimack Valley is really a tight-knit community, and we're really proud to be part of that community," Kelley said. "In these situations, you know, it's been described to me as 'family helping family,' and that's how it feels."

Most of the animals have already been reunited with their owners (and they returned with some food, thanks to all those donations). There are about a dozen pets that need longer-term care, from families whose homes saw more intense damage from the gas explosions. The

"We anticipated that there would be animals in need, and we immediately started a plan to [notify] the police and the fire department that we were available."

Mike Kelley, MSPCA director of adoption centers and programs

MSPCA is making arrangements to transfer those pets into foster care; the pets will be reunited with their families as soon as possible.

Kolya is one of the pets already returned home, Mancini said, where the German shepherd is "happy and calm, no longer barking [and] content in his familiar environment."

It was a busy week for the MSPCA after the gas explosions, but their relief efforts aren't over. The MSPCA will take in some adoptable animals from shelters in North and South Carolina, which frees up space for those shelters to then take in strays and animals displaced by the storm. The MSPCA doesn't want to bring those displaced animals all the way up to Massachusetts, Kelley explained, because then their owners won't find them.

BRIEF

Recovery plan eyes gas service restoration before Thanksgiving

National Guardsmen delivering hotplates; teams of electricians, assessors, translators and plumbers; and 24,000 space heaters will arrive in the Merrimack Valley in the coming days to support residents during a pipeline repair and gas restoration effort that officials said will be complete by Nov. 19.

Gov. Charlie Baker, Lawrence Mayor Dan Rivera and other officials detailed the plans late last week in Lawrence, where Baker introduced retired Navy Capt. Joe Albanese as the outside contractor that Columbia Gas has brought on as chief recovery officer. Albanese, founder and CEO of the construction management firm Commodore Builders, has 25 years of military service with naval construction forces, according to the utility.

Albanese said 20 crews are in the area beginning the work to restore gas service to 8,600 customers after last Thursday's series of fires and explosions in Lawrence, Andover and North Andover. By Oct. 8, 195 crews will be on scene, he said.

Baker said about 2,000 gas meters can be brought back to full service in the next few weeks, with one project already underway in Lawrence. He described the effort as a "massive undertaking."

"Everyone's top priority is safety," Baker said. KRISTIN TOUSSAINT

How Jane Fonda defied fame and mistakes to become America's most important actress

Susan Lacy talks us through her HBO documentary "Jane Fonda In Five Acts."

GREGORY WAKEMAN
Gregory.Wakeman@metro.us

"Jane Fonda in Five Acts" debuts tonight on HBO. GETTY IMAGES

Director Susan Lacy has been wanting to make a documentary about Jane Fonda since she read her autobiography in 2005.

Lacy instantly recognized that Fonda's life and career was ripe for such a film. Not just because of her story as an actress and an activist, but as the daughter of Hollywood legend Henry Fonda. She also knew there would be mountains of material to work with.

Lacy was surprised by just how much access and footage she was able to get, all of which helped her to make a definitive and all-encompassing piece that reveals how Jane was able to merge her talent with her activism to become the most important actress in American history.

"In Jane's own book she said she was writing the book to try and understand her first two acts she could try to live out her third," Lacey tells Metro. "The notion of acts was embedded in my brain when I made this film. When I studied her story and interviewed her, which I did 12 long times that came to over 20 hours of footage, her life really was, even though she didn't structure the book that way, structured by the four men in her life."

The fact that both the film and Jane's life are able to be structured into five acts made us wonder if Lacy had considered the famous F. Scott Fitzgerald remark, "There are no second acts in American lives," while making it.

"Of course I did. I am a huge Fitzgerald fan. You think of that often. I think he is wrong. There are many second acts. The aspiration to have a second act is what Gatsby is all about," admits Lacy. "I don't think Jane does it consciously. She is very meticulous, very professional, she is very ordered. But I also think there is a lot of spontaneity in her life. She goes with the flow."

Despite the trials and tribulations that Jane has experienced in her extraordinary life in activism and in her career as an actress, Lacy insists that the actress has never been concerned with how the public perceived her.

"Public image is a concern for everybody, but particularly celebrities. I don't think that was ever a concern for her. I think she operates in a different place," says Lacy. "Of course, it is a tricky terrain. Especially when you are hated. And you get out there on the frontline and you speak up and you make some mistakes, some of the mistakes she made in Vietnam still haunt her 50 years later."

"She has lived a brave and unfettered life. I don't she thinks about the impact that things are gonna have," she adds. "I think she is surprised at the impact she has had. And she is really surprised at the career she is having at the age of 80. I don't think she expected it."

"Jane Fonda in Five Acts" airs tonight at 8 p.m. on HBO.

'Deadpool' writers bring a bit of Boston to the Big Apple

Rhett Reese and Paul Wernick's new series "Wayne" debuted at the Tribeca TV Festival.

MATT JUUL
matthew.juul@metro.us

Having penned the scripts for "Deadpool" and "Zombieland," Hollywood scribes Rhett Reese and Paul Wernick know the keys to making a great action comedy. The duo is getting another crack at the genre while serving as executive producers for the new YouTube Premium series "Wayne," which had its world premiere at the Tribeca TV Festival over the weekend, before hitting the streaming service in 2019.

Reese and Wernick were joined by stars Mark McKenna and Ciara Bravo, as well as director Iain B. MacDonald and series creator Shawn Simmons, at this weekend's festivities. According to the "Deadpool" writers, Simmons' "Wayne" is a "breath of fresh air" that offers a "window into Shawn's childhood" growing up just outside of Boston.

"Wayne" follows McKenna's titular character as he tries to locate his late father's stolen Pontiac Trans Am, going on a "gritty, hilarious, and sometimes bloody road trip adventure" from Southie to Florida with his crush Del (Bravo) by his side.

"We're sitting on what we think is a brilliant, dramatic, funny, heartfelt television show that's unlike anything out there," says Wernick. "We're really, really excited to unveil it on the world."

The "Deadpool" scribes appeared at the Tribeca TV Festival for a screening of "Wayne." GETTY IMAGES

Where did the idea for "Wayne" come from?

Reese: Shawn is from Brockton, Massachusetts, which is a hardscrabble suburb of Boston. I think that the show has been percolating in the back of Shawn's brain his entire life. He's from Brockton, he grew up there, went to school there.

Wernick: Got the s—t beat out of him there.

Reese: Yeah, and also beat the s—t out of some other folks there, probably. And so that voice is very much lived inside his head. When he decided to do this project about a kid from the other side of the tracks in Brockton, I think a lot of it came from personal experience.

How does the show compare to your past action comedy works?

Wernick: It fits squarely into what we've done before. This really is an action comedy that has heart, is a love story. The dirty little secret about "Deadpool," it was a romantic comedy. The first movie was a romantic comedy disguised as a superhero movie. This really is a love story, a romance, disguised as an action adventure. It's the story of this boy, Wayne, who falls in love with Del, also a 14- to 15-year-old kid. It's action, it's adventure, it's drama and, most importantly, it's heart.

Why was Mark the right fit to play Wayne?

Reese: He wears a lot on his face, and Wayne is a character of few words. Mark is very expressive with his face. He's also very physical. There's almost nothing he can't do, so whether it's throw a punch or ride a bicycle — he's really great at bicycle tricks — he's a very physical actor. There's an authenticity to him. The only question we had about him was, "Can you create the Boston or Brockton accent, given that you're Irish?" What we thankfully discovered was that a lot of the influences in Boston are Irish, of course, and that accent ultimately evolved from an Irish accent. So it wasn't that hard for him to do.

5 Fun things to do this week

Party with Lil Xan, enjoy pizza with pros and more.

MATT JUUL

Shaggy and Sting take over the House of Blues this week. GETTY IMAGES

Need some help planning out your week? We've got you covered. From hip-hop concerts to pizza parties with pros, here are the best things to do in Boston this week.

"Parks and Recreation"-themed trivia night
Are you a scholar of all things Pawnee? Do you know every detail of April and Andy's relationship? If the answer is yes, then head to the Harp on Monday night to test your knowledge at a "Parks and Recreation"-themed trivia night. Teams can sign up for free on a first come, first served basis, and the winners will take home gift cards to the Harp.
Sept. 24, 7 p.m., the Harp, 85 Causeway St., free, harpboston.com

Sip & Spell
Test your spelling skills while enjoying a few brews at the Samuel Adams tap room this week. The monthly series returns on Tuesday with another new beer on tap made especially for spellers.
Sept. 25, 6 p.m., Samuel Adams, 30 Germania St., $5, 21+, samueladams.com

Shaggy & Sting
The unlikely odd couple of musical stars are heading to the Hub this week. Fresh off the release of their collaborative album "44/876" earlier this year, "It Wasn't Me" singer Shaggy and former Police frontman Sting will take the stage at the House of Blues on Tuesday night.
Sept. 25., 7 p.m., House of Blues, 15 Lansdowne St., $105+, houseofblues.com

Pizza with the Pros
Eataly kicks off its new food series this week, featuring a few faces that should be familiar to New England sports fans. Each month, notable athletes will go head-to-head to see who's the best pizza-making pro. Hosted by former Patriots player Jarvis Green, guests will get the chance to meet the stars and vote for the winner during the festivities. The first showdown will be between ex-Patriots star Patrick Pass and former Celtics player Cedric Maxwell.
Sept. 26, 6 p.m.-7:30 p.m., Eataly, Prudential Center, 800 Boylston St., $50, eataly.com

Lil Xan
Despite previous reports, the "Betrayed" rapper isn't retired yet. In fact, Lil Xan hits the Hub this week for two shows at the Paradise Rock Club.
Sept. 27-28, 7 p.m., Paradise Rock Club, 967 Commonwealth Ave., $30+, crossroadspresents.com

Adam Rippon on finding your Olympic work ethic

We caught up with the Olympian ahead of his appearance at the Forbes Under 30 Summit.

PAT KING
patrick.king@metro.us

GETTY IMAGES

Adam Rippon is much more than an athlete. The Olympic figure skater and political activist captured hearts during the PyeongChang Winter Olympics where he and the rest of the U.S. men's figure skating team took home bronze, making him the first openly gay U.S. man athlete to win an award at the games.

Rippon has also fought for the LGBTQ community, famously taking issue with the presence of Vice President Mike Pence at the Olympics. Since then, Rippon has received a wide range of recognition including being named to TIME Magazine's 100 List of Most Influential People.

We caught up with Rippon before his appearance at the Forbes Under 30 Summit in Boston this fall.

What's the key to having an Olympic-level work ethic?

I think that when I was skating everyday — especially training for the Olympics — to be honest, I didn't walk into the rink every single day and be like, "I love what I'm doing!" There were definitely days where I walked in and said, "I don't want to be here. I'm too tired to do this. This is way too stressful." When I had days like that I made sure to find joy in the little things. So, I made sure that I set little goals for myself for that day so that I could make it through that day and still feel accomplished.

I think that the lessons that I learned from sports are the lessons that I will take with me through my entire life. It's totally normal to feel stagnant or to feel stuck. But if you set little goals to meet up with your big goals, it's going to make you feel like you're making progress. So that you can end every day and feel like you're a champion every single day.

How has that work ethic helped you cope with failure and keep success in perspective?

What sports taught me the most is that there is no such thing as a failure unless you've failed to try. When things don't go well or when you've made mistakes, I think that mistakes can happen and that it's only a failure if you've failed to learn from your mistakes.

I think that if you learn from your mistakes, you improve. Making mistakes is an opportunity for you to learn more about whatever you're working toward and more about yourself. I know I've made the same mistakes a few time and then I've finally learned my lesson I never made the same mistake twice. I think that when you have to perform in front of a lot of people and you go through your best and worst times in front of thousands of people it forces you to grow up. Part of that is taking responsibility for what you've done, responsibility for your actions and owning them, and owning the flaws.

What are your feelings on how athletes in your position should use your platform to speak truth to power?

I think that athletes have an incredible opportunity to use their voice to help make change. I think that sports have always been one of those things that really gets political. I think that a lot of people think that they should keep politics out of sports.

But when you have someone like Colin Kaepernick who is trying to speak about police brutality, he is giving a voice to people who don't have the opportunity that he has. Him being out there on the field and him kneeling for the anthem is a very peaceful protest and he is within his right to do that. It's people like Colin who helped give me the confidence to speak out against the Vice President when I was at the Olympic Games. I think that in this day and age, people have such an opportunity to see what their favorite athletes are doing. You can see where they are, who they are, what they're about all through different social media platforms.

I think when you have the opportunity to share so much of yourself, you have the opportunity to share your beliefs and stand up for things your believe in and make a difference and make an impact.

I'm from a very small town in Pennsylvania and there was a university about a five minute walk from my house. It used to be a Baptist university and they went through a rebranding. They call it Clarks Summit University. They had a student that went there a few years ago and tried to be readmitted into the school and was denied admittance because he is gay. ... That's something that I felt growing up and that's something that I really wanted to speak out against. That situation didn't really speak for everyone in my town, because there is another university that stepped forward to pay for his education and let him into the school so he could graduate. So it's two sides of the coin. It's definitely something that I feel today and something I felt passionate speaking about especially at the Olympic Games given that platform.

I applaud other athletes that speak out and talk about their beliefs because I think it's so important and they have huge platforms. A lot of athletes come from humble beginnings and their roots are not in the glamorous lifestyles... I think that when they speak their opinions we should listen to what they have to say.

Will Celtics target Butler?

The Celtics have the assets available to land the All-Star level swingman.

MATT BURKE
matthew.burke@metro.us

Jimmy Butler has stated his desire to team with Kyrie Irving. GETTY IMAGES

Most would agree that the Celtics will have an exceptional team in 2018-19 but that they just aren't at the level of the Golden State Warriors, particularly since Golden State added DeMarcus Cousins this summer. In this era of superstar one-upsmanship, the Celtics look to be one superstar player away from legitimately being able to take down the reigning champs. So without question, Celtics boss Danny Ainge is monitoring this Jimmy Butler situation closely.

Ainge has become a master at playing the waiting game when it comes to blockbuster trades. When the smoke clears around the NBA, Ainge is usually the one holding the most chips, ready to pounce. But the reason Ainge typically has so many cards is because he waits for the right player to make a move on.

The Celtics had the opportunity to trade for Butler himself just 15 months ago at the time of the 2017 NBA Draft, but rebuffed Chicago's demand that they surrender the No. 3 overall pick — which wound up being Jayson Tatum. Ainge played that hand correctly for sure, making sure not to overpay for a player of Butler's caliber. Butler is an All-Star level talent for sure, but he will never be regarded as a top 10 player in the league. Tatum, meanwhile, is already looking like he could reach those heights.

There are several reasons why the Celtics might be interested in Butler this time around, however. First is that Timberwolves owner Glen Taylor wants to trade Butler ASAP, and second is that acquiring Butler would greatly please Kyrie Irving, who is set to become a free agent next summer.

Butler himself will be a free agent next summer, and all indications are that he will explore his options. In other words, Butler is being viewed as a one-year rental right now, which is greatly diminishing his price tag.

The Celtics could conceivably be in the mix for Butler without even having to give up one of their top three assets — Tatum, Jaylen Brown and the 2019 Sacramento Kings first-round pick. Ainge seems to be holding out for a bigger fish than Butler (hint: Anthony Davis), but if the Celtics can get Butler for a song right now Ainge would not be shy about pulling the trigger. Essentially, Ainge could have his cake and eat it, too.

Trading away Terry Rozier, Marcus Smart and either the future Grizzlies or Clippers first-round pick that they own would absolutely put the Celtics in the conversation for landing Butler.

None of the teams Butler has said that he wants to go to — the Nets, Knicks or Clippers — have the amount of tradeable assets that the Celtics do. And it seems right now that Taylor wants quality players in return, not just picks.

So the Celtics will be in the mix ... if they want to be.

Halak a strong insurance policy for B's

The former Islanders goaltender will see plenty of ice time in Boston.

RICH SLATE
letters@metro.us

Jaroslav Halak will be a key figure for the Bruins this coming season. GETTY IMAGES

Jaroslav Halak has the most extensive resume of all the backup goaltenders who have worked behind Bruins star Tuukka Rask. Anton Khudobin was a solid No. 2 the last two years in his second stint in Black and Gold. In fact, he was so good last season (16-6-7, 2.56 goals against average, .913 save percentage and 1 shutout) that Dallas outbid the B's and rewarded him with a two-year deal worth $5 million as soon as free agency opened on July 1. Bruins GM Don Sweeney responded quickly by inking Halak to a two-year deal worth $5.5 million on that same day, so you have to figure that the Bruins had been eyeing him for a while.

It has been long-established that Rask is not a workhorse goalie in the Braden Holtby or Corey Crawford mold. That doesn't make him unique in today's NHL, as despite Boston fans' constant criticism of Rask, very few goaltenders actually start 65-plus games every season these days (it just doesn't make much sense for playoff teams). After making a career-high 70 starts in the 2014-15 regular season, Rask was in goal for 64 in 2015-16 and 65 in 2016-17 while injuries and early-season struggles limited him to 54 in 2017-18. Keep in mind too that always-blunt Bruins head coach Bruce Cassidy said shortly after taking over from Claude Julien that Rask needs a break from time to time.

Enter Halak, who in the recent B's preseason game in China made 34 saves as Boston beat Calgary 4-3.

"I felt good," said Halak, who also stopped three of four shots in the shootout. "They kept coming in the first 5-10 minutes, which got me into the game. I'm just glad that the first game is behind us and we got a win. Obviously, it's only preseason but you always want to win."

Halak didn't appear in Boston's other China game (a 3-1 win vs. Calgary on Sept. 19) but with three preseason contests left this week (Monday at Philadelphia, Wednesday vs. Detroit and Saturday vs. Philadelphia), you can bet that he'll get more ice time before the Bruins open the regular season on Oct. 3 in Washington (7:30, NBCSN).

A 33-year-old (nearly two years older than Rask) native of Slovakia, Halak has played on Team Slovakia with Zdeno Chara for much of the past decade at the Olympics and international competitions. He was a ninth-round pick of Montreal in 2003 (271st overall) and he made his NHL debut in 2007 with the Canadiens. Since then, he's spent time in St. Louis and briefly in Washington before playing for the Islanders the last four seasons. He won the William Jennings Trophy (lowest GAA) in 2011-12 with the Blues (1.97) and he set a pair of goaltending records in 2014-15 with the Islanders (most consecutive wins, 11; most wins in a season, 38) which led to him being a 2015 NHL All-Star for the first and only time. His numbers went off a cliff the last two seasons with the Islanders, but that at least partially can be attributed to New York's nonexistent defense.

Aries Settle in and get things done. You'll face criticism if you aren't prepared or fail to finish what you start. Don't let a relationship problem interrupt your progress.

Taurus A hasty decision will result in a costly mistake. Take your time and do things right from the get-go. Patience is a virtue. Don't let someone pressure you into hurrying.

Gemini Your intelligence will help you surpass anyone who tries to compete with you, as long as you don't let the actions of others distract you.

Cancer Do something that will make you feel good. Pampering yourself, getting a makeover or spending time with a loved one will help ease stress and avert a mood swing.

Leo Listen carefully and make up your own mind. An offer to achieve peace and tranquility through unorthodox means should be politely declined.

Virgo A business trip or meeting will encourage you to take on new challenges. Educational pursuits will change your way of thinking and pursuing goals. Romance will improve an important relationship.

Libra Embrace change with a positive attitude. Knowing what you want as opportunities arise will be a direct result of being prepared for whatever comes your way. Seize the moment.

Scorpio Be passionate about the positive changes you want to make. Take a unique position when sharing your opinion or recommendations. Channel your energy where it will count the most.

Sagittarius Do what you can to give back to others. Donate your time or offer your services, but don't let anyone take advantage of your generosity. An emotional incident should be handled carefully.

Capricorn You'll be tempted to make a change, but first you must iron out the particulars. Be open to suggestions; in the end, a combination of old and new ideas is favored.

Aquarius Put your energy to work for you instead of letting it make your life more difficult. Refuse to let anxiety get the better of you when positive change is what's required.

Pisces A change to the way you look or feel is apparent. Search for an innovative way to enhance your appearance. A settlement or gain is heading your way.
